

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS REPORT ON SOUTH AMERICA

Paul H. Farwell and T. J. Stone, students in the Boston High School of Commerce, who have recently returned from an extensive trip through Argentina and Brazil, are possibly the only visiting scholars in the city. They are also the only high school boys to have been invited to participate in a well-attended meeting of the advisory committee of the High School of Commerce as to the business conditions in Latin America. The advisory committee is composed of representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, the Boston Board of Education, and the Boston Board of Trade.

Both students were given a very impressive tour, and at the close of the meeting A. J. Stone, said that he would gladly come back to the United States to give a lecture to his fellow students in three or four years, and to give a lecture to his fellow students in three or four years.

The students are also very interested in the business conditions in Latin America, and are getting the largest portion of the information from the free press. It is very interesting to see how the students are getting the largest portion of the information from the free press. Big Market Is Waiting.

Big Market Is Waiting.

Mr. Tardivel was emphatic in his statement that American business men would never do much trading with Brazil unless honest, intelligent representatives, men who know how to cater to the wants of Brazil, were sent from this country. A cash trade in coffee, rubber, cocoa and other products awaits the men who know how to get it.

Following the remarks of Messrs. Roposed, Frederick P. Fish, chairman of the executive committee, suggested that the now abandoned Pleasant street elevated station would be a very desirable site and urged the early construction of a school that would accommodate 1,000 pupils.

James P. Fagan of the firm of How-

Under labor Massachusetts will pay tribute to Frank K. Foster at a monster benefit tournament which has been arranged by the joint committees representing the American Federation of Labor and the Boston Central Labor Union.

Mr. Foster is now at the McLean Asylum, Waverley, only at times to receive his aged and infirm patients, and is unable to leave to relax.

Two years ago, while on a mission to the interests of organized labor in all parts of the United States, he was arrested and brought home by a state of collapse. After a short rest he was again at the front of the branch of the strike, and was forced to go to the hospital.

His illness was the result of the activity of the fight, not only of the union men, but of all workmen, was not allowed to be in any way lessened.

MERRILL IN

[illegible]

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed today in the United States District Court by Colonel Winthrop M. Morgan. He gives his address as No. 143 Massachusetts avenue, Boston, and his occupation as a real estate dealer. He was formerly a member of Governor Dong's staff.

He states that he has liabilities of $1,550, none of which are secured. He gives his assets as $21,000. Among his assets he mentions a claim against the Citizens Savings Bank of Worcester, R. I., and interest in copper mines in Nevada.

The principal claim against him is the well-known medical lecturer and eminent specialist in all the chronic diseases, whose name is practically extended over 40 years, is still engaged in the active work of his life.

Dr. Greene is the proprietor of Gray's Blood and Nerve Remedy, and his personal record is sufficient evidence of the sterling excellence of this wonderful medicine.

Dr. Greene can be consulted free of charge, either by letter or personally at his office, 211 Temple Pl., Boston, Mass.

The same Dr. Greene, the medical expert, has been interviewed on the past four years.

Merrill, Young Merrill was arrested a few days ago on a technical charge of larceny from a bookbinder of a sum amounting several hundred dollars as the result of a real estate deal. He is out on bail now.

the old subway at Boylston street and time and money saved to passengers

Passengers Handicapped

Passengers Handicapped.

According to the old scheme of reaching the South Station or that section of fareless zone, a person would have to walk to west, a person got of the car at the Bay State street subway station, transferred to an Elevated train that shot around the city and got out at South Station in six minutes.

Brooklyn, Cambridge and other populous sections have found themselves seriously handicapped by the old system.

A passenger who made several trips from the Bay State street subway station to South Station would find that the person may walk the distance between the two stations in less than half the time it may take by paying one fare.

The passenger first transferred from the subway to the elevated train, then to the car that runs through the old subway tunnel, then to the elevated train, walked up two flights of stairs and boarded the elevated shuttle train that took him to the South Station.

Three minutes under favorable conditions that meant that there were no delays. The conditions could be very different. The traffic was so light that there was no congestion.

Three Changes on Trip.

A second trip, when traffic was heavier, covered the same route, required exactly thirty minutes to get to the South Station. This trip was made when the cars were jammed and people standing. The conditions were probably as unfavorable as they are likely to be.

Another note that may be translated at once in another expense item. Taking a New York car from the Bayview subway station to the South Station cost $1.00. The car was transferred to the East Boston line.

This second change required by a passenger to get to the South Station was $1.00. Starting entails the expenditure of an additional cent—the tunnel charge.

At the South Station, the passenger took the elevator which lifted him to the elevated structure. There a third change was made. The fare to the destination was $1.00. The total fare was $2.00.

Walking Was Quicker.

It is the idea of taking from twenty to thirty minutes twice a day out of a person's time to get between the Royston subway station and the South station which is repugnant to those whose time is valuable.

One citizen said that he had found a solution of the trouble by walking from the Royston station to the South station. He had made the walk in about eight minutes.

But it was pointed out to him by another citizen that this does not meet the transportation emergency. What is wanted, this man said, was a scheme of reaching

The distance between the stations of the two subways at Beylston street—a block only—suggests that as the best connecting link. The only connection feasible, it is believed, is an underground one.

This could be constructed without a great outlay of money if considered in connection with the immense benefit that would accrue.

Travelling Not Improved.

Those who use the new Washington street tube have no complaint to make of the accommodations. There are plenty of trains that whiz them swiftly to their

But the slum-dweller in the West End of the city and the living in the west of the city are disappointed because the new $10,000,000 improvement not only does not "improve" travelling for them but actually worsens it. Hence:

THE BURNING AMERICAN has received numerous letters of protest and complaint. Some suggestions have been received as to how conditions might be improved. The columns of this newspaper are open to the public for a free and fair discussion of the transportation problem.

ADVERTISE IN THE BOSTON AMERICAN.

Double Stamps Every Morning Until Noon

By T. E. Powers

Rapid transit for Boston remains an unsolved problem. Almost coincidental with the opening of the new $10,000,000 tube under Washington street, designed and constructed to provide the public with quick transportation, the glaring is demonstrated. Only an hour or two after the first trains were put into operation was required to make plain one of two facts:

Either a most gigantic blunder was committed by the men who planned the tunnel, or the Rapid Transit Commission endorsed a condition created to goad an impatient traveling public into paying an extra fare.

As affairs exist, to the busy man "rapid transit" in Boston means a ten-cent fare, just double the price paid in any other city in the United States, with the one exception of Chicago, where experts are now engaged in devising a medium looking towards universal transfers for that city's extensive elevated road system.

It is for the people of Boston to say if this stupendous defect shall be remedied. The people of Boston own the subways. They have but to lift their voices to correct the blunder or to stop the plunder—which ever the case may be.

A simple panacea is right at hand to relieve the congestion, to make rapid transit really rapid. The BOSTON AMERICAN offers it to-day to the people. It is the only solution of the rapid transit problem.

Construct an underground connection between the Tremont street and Washington street subways at Boylston street. IT IS A DISTANCE OF ONE BLOCK.

With this connection established, rapid transit in Boston would be a condition and not the unanswered problem it now is.

Just so long as the present arrangements for a free transfer from one underground route to another are permitted to rest as they are just so long will the people of Boston permit themselves to be imposed upon in the matter of public utilities.

Understand thoroughly, the BOSTON AMERICAN is not criticizing the new tunnel, either as a piece of engineering or in point of the convenience offered its patrons, once they are in the trains.

The road itself and its rolling stock are most acceptable in their working. The stations are carefully located, and they are adequately lighted and as well ventilated as it is possible to air an excavation thirty or forty feet below the surface.

The employees of the road are attentive and polite. They worked hard on the first day the tunnel was used to abate the confusion naturally arising out of the first day's utilization of a strange public convenience.

In the matter of conducting the new tunnel the BOSTON AMERICAN has no word of adverse criticism for the management. Rather, it is constrained to compliment the management for its safe handling of the throngs on the opening day.

As an engineering feat the BOSTON AMERICAN is proud of the new subway. Mr. Howard A. Carson, who supervised its construction did his work ably. The Washington street tunnel will be his monument—if you can imagine a monument under the earth, instead of tow

As a tunnel the BOSTON AMERICAN commends without qualification the new Washington street tube.

BUT, it must view askance the Rapid Transit Commission which selected the plans for the tunnel and then gave it the mark of approval. If a mistake was made the Rapid Transit Commission is none the less culpable.

If the Rapid Transit Commission wittingly indorsed the plan by which passengers must go miles out of their way, entailing a loss of from five to twenty-five minutes in arriving at a destination, it is time the citizens of Boston to thunder their protest.

There can be but one effect arising from this awkward—may be wilfully awkward—method of free transferring. Time is a commodity. The merchant and the laborer alike measure it in dollars and cents. It is an injustice to the busy man to take twenty-five minutes of his time. It is altylly snipping away a portion of his income.

And for what purpose? At least, there will be none from the Rapid Transit Commission.

Its members would very probably be horrified at any suggestion that the complicated arrangements for free transfers from one tube to another were created with an idea of exasperating a man to such a limit that in order to save fifteen minutes he would walk one block and then

Yet that is what a busy man will do. Five cents to save five minutes is frequently a profitable investment. It is, however, none the less a hard-fought battle, and the circumstances set forth

The mode of connection for that solitary block between Tremont and Washington streets is too simple a matter to be discussed here. Dismissing it in a single sentence, proper transfers at this point could be made, thanks to a rising platform underground or by building a chute.

A new Legislature will meet in January. The Rapid Transit Com-

Now, AT ONCE, immediately, is the proper time for taking steps toward laying the question of this stupendous defect in the tunnel before the Legislature.

If the commission intends to be fair to the people of Boston it will apply next month for permission to make the Boylston street connection as suggested by the BOSTON AMERICAN.

Absolutely no way to get to South Station from such important centres as Back Bay, the Public Gardens or Copley Square. The new Washington street tunnel has failed.

Don't Give Your Husband Money

"I have given him every dollar I have been able to earn for three years, and I have had to work hard to earn it, too."

Poor thing! And she didn't have the sense to know that that is the very reason the man who promised to love, cherish and protect her ran away with another woman and left her ill and alone.

She learned a lesson. After this, she says, she is going to ask his help every time she gets a chance for she sees quite plainly that it makes him very happy to believe that she like to believe that they are to women, and anything that makes them think that they are makes them dislike the woman making their self-esteem away
